PREFACE TO VOLUME VI.

RECEIVED
 NOV 28 1885
 College of the Holy Cross Library

THIS volume, of which a large part of the cost of production has been defrayed by the munificence of the Goldsmiths' Company, contains L and M, edited by Henry Bradley, and N, edited by W. A. Craigie. It may be remarked that in several recent Dictionaries the space occupied by the part of the English vocabulary here treated amounts almost exactly to one-tenth of the whole.

For observations on the etymological and other characteristics of the words included in the three divisions of this volume, and for detailed statistics relating to the number of words of various classes, and the number of quotations, the reader is referred to the separate prefaces to L, M, and N. The following recapitulation of some of the figures there given may be found convenient:—

	Main words.	Subordinate words.	Special combinations.	Obvious combinations.	Total of words.	No. of quotations.
L (528 pages)	7,049	2,669	2,342	2,929	14,989	65,440
M (820 " )	12,988	6,422	2,986	3,636	26,032	99,255
N (277 " )	3,484	2,298	440	1,570	7,792	36,859
	23,521	11,389	5,768	8,135	48,813	201,554

The aggregate numbers for the first six volumes of the Dictionary are as follows:—

Main words.	Subordinate words.	Special combinations.	Obvious combinations.	Total number of words.
130,219	34,047	25,165	21,349	210,780

PREFACE TO THE LETTER L.

THIS half-volume, containing the words with initial L, includes 7,049 Main words, 2,342 Special Combinations explained and illustrated under these, 2,669 Subordinate entries, and 2,929 Obvious Combinations; in all 14,989 words. Of the Main words, 1,945 are marked † as obsolete, and 330 are marked || as alien or not completely naturalized*.

In the prefatory note to G it was pointed out that the portion of the English vocabulary under that initial letter was characterized by the entire absence of the words with Greek, Latin, French, and English prefixes, which under nearly all the other letters of the alphabet are abundant, and by the unusually large number of words (chiefly of Old English, Scandinavian, or early French origin) expressing notions of extreme generality, which have branched out into a great variety of special senses. The L portion of the vocabulary is also distinguished by both these characteristics, and the consequence is that the L words, like the G words, have in this work a proportionately much larger space than is allotted to them in dictionaries which do not follow the historical method of treatment.

The proportions in which the component linguistic elements of the English language are represented in the words with initial L are probably not far from the average. The native English element has numerically only the second place; but it comes unquestionably first with regard to the importance of the words belonging to it, and the amount of space which they occupy in the Dictionary. Typical examples of the wide and often interesting ramification of meaning characteristic of this oldest portion of the language may be seen under lady, land, lay vb.<sup>1</sup>, let vb.<sup>1</sup>, lie vb.<sup>1</sup>, life, light sb., adjs. and vbs., long adj., look, lord, lose vb.<sup>1</sup>, lot, love sb.<sup>1</sup>, vb.<sup>1</sup>, lust, lusty. The Scandinavian words are perhaps somewhat less numerous than in some other letters, but several of them, as law, leg, left (whence lefty), loose adj. and vb., low adj., are more than ordinarily frequent in use, and rich in variety of senses and applications. The Romanic and Latin words outnumber those from all other sources together. Many of them, as usual, are of rare occurrence; but the great importance of this element may be seen from such examples as label, labour, language, large, letter, liberty, library, line, liquid, literature, locomotive, lodge—to mention only a few of the most prominent. The Greek derivatives are mainly scientific terms of modern formation; among those of earlier introduction and wider currency are lexicon, lexicography, logarithm, logic. The quasi-suffixes -loger, -logian, -logic, -logical, -logue, -logy, representing the terminal elements in certain Greek compounds of λόγος, and in derivatives of these, are so common in English that it has been found convenient to treat them in special articles. From Dutch or Low German we have the important words luck and loiter, besides several others little used or obsolete. The list of Celtic words is even shorter than usual; whether it should include leop sb.<sup>1</sup> is doubtful; the only other L words of Celtic origin that are at all widely known are loch<sup>1</sup> (lough), leprechaun, and lymphad. Of words from extra-European languages there are the Hebrew leviathan, Levite, log sb.<sup>2</sup>, the Arabic latic, leban, lohoek, the Indian lac<sup>1</sup>, lac<sup>2</sup>, languoty, langur, lascar, lat, lathee, lingam, lodh, loot, lootie, lota, lungi, lunkah, the Chinese langshan, li<sup>1</sup>, li<sup>2</sup>, liang, likin, ling sb.<sup>3</sup>, litchi, longan, loquat, the Malay lanchara, lata, lorikeet, lory, the African lamba, leche, lhiamba, limbo<sup>2</sup>, loa, lobola, and the South American llama and lucuma.

In a very large number of instances the etymology of words will be found to be more correctly stated or more fully discussed than in any previous English dictionary. Attention may be specially called to the etymological notes on lad, larch, lass, laudanum, lavendar, law-abiding, lawn sb.<sup>1</sup>, lectern, Lenten, leprechaun, less, lewd, ligure, like adj., lobby, lobe, lobster, locomotive, lodge, lose vb.<sup>1</sup>, louver, lozenge, lucern<sup>1</sup>, lymph. In the articles on the suffixes -let, -leve, -like, -ling<sup>1</sup>, ling<sup>2</sup>, -ly<sup>1</sup>, -ly<sup>2</sup>, the history and functions of these formations are explained with greater fullness than has been attempted elsewhere.

The material originally collected for the letter L was laboriously and efficiently sub-edited, about twenty-five years ago, by Mr. W. M. Rossetti, whose work was continued by the Rev. C. Y. Potts, of Ledbury. Subsequently the portion from L to Lusus was taken in hand, for the incorporation of the new quotations, by the late Mr. E. C. Hulme, and that from Lut- to the end of the letter by Mr. E. Warner, of Eltham. The work of these gentlemen was completed in 1885-6, since which time a large mass of additional material has been accumulated.

* The following table illustrates the scale of this work as compared with that of certain other Dictionaries:

	Johnson.	Cassell's 'Encyclopædic' (including Sup- plement 1902).	'Century' Dict.	'Funk's Standard.'	Here.
Total words recorded in L	1,286	7,320	7,719	8,017	14,989
Words illustrated by quotations	1,063	2,211	2,503	762	11,469
Number of illustrative quotations	4,017	2,787	6,279	999	65,440

The number of quotations in the L portion of Richardson's Dictionary is 3,321.

PREFACE TO THE LETTER L.

Amongst those who have rendered assistance in the preparation of the articles in this half-volume, especial thanks are due to Prof. Sievers, of Leipzig, M. Paul Meyer, of Paris, Prof. Napier, of Oxford, Prof. Kluge, of Freiburg-im-Breisgau, and Prof. Morsbach, of Göttingen, for help in the treatment of etymological questions; to Mr. James Platt, jun., for information relating to the origin and history of words from American and other little-known languages; to Dr. W. Besant, of Cambridge, and Prof. Love, of Oxford, for help with terms of mathematical and physical science; to Prof. J. K. Laughton, for much information on the nautical uses of words; to Prof. J. Cook Wilson, of Oxford, for important suggestions relating to the article Logic; and to Sir Howard Elphinstone, Bart., and Sir W. R. Anson, Bart., M.P., for information on the legal sense of Lien. The verification, in the British Museum Library, of references to books not accessible at Oxford has been done, at no small cost of time and labour, by Mr. E. L. Brandreth. Mr. R. J. Whitwell, of Oxford, has frequently rendered help of various kinds. Dr. Furnivall's multifarious services to the Dictionary have been no less abundant than in the former volumes.

The proofs have been regularly read, and many valuable suggestions furnished, by Lord Aldenham, the Rev. Canon Fowler, of Durham, Dr. W. Sykes, F.S.A., of Exeter, Mr. W. H. Stevenson, M.A., the Rev. Prof. Skeat, the Rev. W. B. R. Wilson, of Dollar, Mr. A. Caland, of Wageningen, Holland, and latterly by Mr. H. Chichester Hart, who has supplied many important additional quotations. The first 64 pages had the advantage of being read in proof by the late Dr. Fitzedward Hall, whose invaluable services have been acknowledged in all the foregoing instalments of the work.

The assistants who have worked with me in the preparation of this half-volume are Mr. G. F. H. Sykes, B.A., Mr. Walter Worrall, B.A., Mr. C. T. Onions, M.A., Mr. W. J. Lewis, Mr. H. J. Bayliss, Miss E. S. Bradley, and (in the later portions) Mr. James Dallas.

OXFORD, JULY, 1903.

Lock, suffix, in mod. Eng. occurring only in wedlock, represents OE. -lūc, the second element of numerous compounds (usually neuter; rarely masc.) in which the first element is a sb. OE. had about a dozen of these compounds (those in which -lūc means 'offering', LAKE sb.<sup>1</sup>, are not counted); in all these the second element may be rendered 'actions or proceedings, practice', as brýfuldūc nuptials, headolūc, feohlūc, heabolūc, warfare, hæmedlūc, wīflūc, carnal intercourse, reafūc robbery, wedlūc pledge-giving, also espousals, nuptials, wiltlūc punishment, worhtlūc calumny. The -lūc of these compounds should probably be identified with lūc play, sport, LAKE sb.<sup>2</sup>; the words meaning 'warfare', which may have been the earliest examples of this use, may be compared with the synonymous compounds in -plega play. Of the OE. compounds of lūc three (brýfuldūc, feohlūc, reafūc) survived into early ME., and wedlūc still survives with altered meaning. In ME. the suffix was sometimes assimilated in form to the etymologically equivalent but functionally distinct Scandinavian -laik. A few examples, not recorded in OE., appear in early ME.: drowemcrlak (DEMERLAYKE), FERLAC, SCHENDLAC, TREWLAC, WOHLAC (the last from a vlh.-stem, wool- to woo); but none of these survived later than the 14th century.

Long standing. The origin of this phrase seems to be illustrated by the following passage:—a 1568 ASCHAM Scholem. 1. (Arb.) 34 Except a very few, to whom peradventure blood and happie parentage, may perchance purchase a long standing vpon the stage.

Look, v. The synonyms MDu, looken should have been cited as cognate.

L (el), the twelfth letter of the modern and the eleventh of the ancient Roman alphabet, represents historically the Gr. lambda and ultimately the Semitic lamed. The earliest known Semitic forms of the character are 𐤋 and 𐤌; both these occur in early Greek inscriptions; the latter was adopted from the Greek into the Latin alphabet, and is the ancestor of the modern Roman forms, but in Greece itself was superseded by the inverted form 𐤍, which eventually became Α.

The sound normally expressed by the letter is the 'point-side' consonant, i.e. a sound produced by the emission of breath at the sides, or one side, of the oral passage when it is partially closed by contact or the 'point' of the tongue with the gums or palate.

In phonetic treatises l is used as a general name for consonants produced by lateral emission of breath, whether the stoppage is produced (as above) by the 'point', or by some other part of the tongue; thus we speak of a 'guttural l' and a 'palatal l' as occurring in various foreign languages.

The 'point-side' consonant admits of considerable diversity in mode of articulation and consequently in acoustic quality. The Eng. l differs from that of Fr. and Ger. in being uttered with the 'front' of the tongue more concave; hence its sound is 'duller' or 'thicker'. Its precise place of articulation varies according to the nature of the adjacent sounds. In Eng. it is normally voiced; an unvoiced l occurring only as a 'glide' connecting the voiced l with a preceding or following unvoiced consonant. Like r and the nasals, l may be used as a sonant or vowel (in the phonetic notation of this Dictionary indicated by 'l'); but this occurs only in unstressed syllables, as in little ('litl'), buckled ('bʊk'ld).

The mod. Eng. l represents not only the OE. l, but the OE. hl (early ME. li) and wl.

In certain combinations an original l has regularly become silent, after having modified the sound of the preceding vowel. In most of these cases the l is still written, and serves to indicate the pronunciation of the preceding vowel. The following combinations of letters (when occurring in the same syllable, or in derivatives of words in which they were tautosyllabic) may be regarded as compound phonetic symbols of almost unvarying value: alf (ʃf), alve (ʃv), alm (ʃm), alk, auk (ʃk), auim (ʃm), alk (ʃk). In many dialects, esp. in Sc., the instances in which an original l regularly disappears are much more numerous than in standard Eng.; cf. Sc. awful, law, cal, etc.; in Sc. the regular representative of old is ow, as in low, pow.

The ch of the prevailing spelling of this and the related words is due to the med. L. practice of writing ch for c before Latin r + c, anchor, phartride, sepulchre. The y, in med. L. a mere graphic variant of i, has been retained in mod. Eng. orthography from the erroneous notion that lacrima is an adoption of Gr. δάκρυμα. The theoretically correct spelling lacrim- has at present no currency, but some writers have adopted the half-correction lacrym-]

Possibly a use of the definite form of the pa. pple. of LEAD v.; in ME. lad is a dialectal variant of led pa. pple. The use might have originated in the application of the plural ladde elliptically to the followers of a lord. Actual evidence, however, is wanting. It is noteworthy that a 'Godric Ladda' attests a document written 1088-1123 (Earle Land Charters 270). If this cognomen be (as is possible) identical with ME. ladde, its evidence is unfavourable to the derivation suggested above.

Quite inadmissible, both on the ground of phonology and meaning, is the current statement that the word is cognate with the last syllable of the Goth. juggalauns 'young man'; the ending -launs (stem -landa + ad, -landi sb.), which does not occur as an independent word, has in compounds the sense 'having (a certain) growth or size', as in hveilauns 'how great, stoutness so great, samanduns' 'equally great'. The Celtic derivations commonly alleged are also worthless: the Welsh lladur is a dictionary figment invented to explain the feminine lodes (in Dictionaries lodes), which Prof. Rhys has shown to be shortened from herlodes, fem. of herland, a. ME. herlot 'hamlet'; and the Irish lath does not exist in either the earlier or the later sense of 'lad', but means 'hero' or 'champion'.

2. A sb. lade, with a sense 'channel, water-course, mouth of a river', has been evolved by etymologists from place-names in which the last element is -lade (OE. gelād channel, as in Creca-gelād Cricklade); the interpretation has been suggested by LADE v. The word was admitted into Bailey's and Johnson's Dicts., and has occasionally been used in literature.

1603 LILLY Ælfric on O. & N. Test. To Rdr. 34 How many learned men have mistaken the name of a place neere Oxford called Creklade? as if it saunored of Greeke, when it is but old English, and signifies Ostium riui, a place where some Creeke or little brooke doth lade or empty it selfe into a greater water. 1705 PHILLIPS (ed. [Com. Teut. str. vb.: OE. hladan (hlōd, gehlōden), corresp. to OFris. hlada, OS. hladan (Du. laden), ON. hlaða (Sw. ladda); with consonant-ablaut the word appears in OHG. hladan (G. laden), Goth. (af)hlapan;—OTeut. *hlap-, hlāb-;—pre-Teut. *klat-, parallel with *klad- in OSI. klasti to place. The general Teut. senses are those represented by branch I; branch II is peculiar to Eng., but OS. has the sense 'to put (liquor) into a vessel', as a particular application of a sense similar to 2 below. Another derivative of the root is MHG. luot burden, mass, multitude;—OTeut. *hlōpā; in the OE. hlōp booty, multitude, OLG. hlōtha booty, this type seems to have coalesced with OTeut. *hlanpā.

The pa. t. has from 15th c. been conjugated weak. The pa. pple. is still usually strong when used in the senses of branch I; in those of branch II it is now always weak.]

Lady (lādi), sh. Forms: 1. hlāfdiz, hlāfdi, hlāf, hlāfdig, Northumb. hlāfdia, Mercian hlāfdie, 2-4 lefdi, 3 lefdi, leved, laf(e)di e, lafvedi, laefdi, leivadi, leofdi, leveda, Orm. laffdig, 3 4 lavedi, levedi, -y, 4 laidi, -y, laveda, laydy, lady, lefyde, levidi, -y, levedie, levidi, lavedi, -y, livedi, 4-5 lavedy, lefy, lade, 4-7 ladi(e, -yo, (pl. ladi(e)). 6. g. Sc. ledy, g. arch. ladye, 4- lady. [OE. hlāfdig wk. fem.; f. hlif bread, lōaf + root af- to knead; see DUTHG.]

Like the corresponding masc. designation hlāfod, lōsu, the word is not found outside Eng. (the lcel. lāfi is adopted from ME.). The etym. above stated is not very plausible with regard to sense; but the attempt to explain hlāfdig as a deriv. of hlāfod is unsatisfactory: the fem. suffix in OE. is -ize, not -ig, and the unliant in the first syllable is difficult to explain on this supposition.

The OE. f., being regularly shortened in ME. before two consonants, yielded regularly l and e according to dialect. The ME. lādi, lēdi, is represented by Sc. ledy. The other form lāfi (= lādi: became lāfedi, 3 syllables), and by regular development lavedi; afterwards the e became silent and the v was dropped; hence the mod. Eng. form.

The genitive sing. (OE. hlāfdigum) became by regular phonetic change in ME. coincident in form with the nom.; hence certain syntactical combs. have the appearance of proper compounds, as lady-bird, lady-day, lady-chapel.

4. A woman of superior position in society, or to whom such a position is conventionally or by courtesy attributed. Originally, the word connoted a degree equal to that expressed by lord; but it was (like its synonyms in all European langs.) early widened in application, while the corresponding masc. term retained its restricted comprehension. In mod. use lady is the recognized fem. analogue of gentleman, and is applied to all women above a loosely-defined and variable, but usually not very elevated standard of social position. Often used esp. in 'this lady' as a more courteous synonym for 'woman', without reference to the status of the person spoken of. See also FINE LADY, YOUNG LADY.

As the traditional association of lady with lord still survives, the former is a title of ostensibly higher dignity than gentleman. Hence, and not directly as the result of the sentiment of gallantry, the customary order of words in 'ladies and gentlemen'.

6. As an honorific title.

a. A prefix forming part of the customary designation of a woman of rank. Also in My lady, an appellation used (chiefly by inferiors) in speaking to or of those who are designated by this prefix.

In the 13-16th c., The (or My) Lady was prefixed to the Christian name of a female member of the royal family, as 'Princess' is now. With regard to the use of the prefix in the titles of the nobility of the British Isles, usage has varied greatly at different times, but the following rules are now established: (1) In speaking of a marchioness, countess, viscountess, or baroness (whether she be such in her own right, by marriage, or by courtesy), the prefix Lady is a less formal substitute for the specific designation of rank, which is not used in conversational address: thus 'the Marchioness (of A.)' is spoken to, and informally spoken of, as 'Lady A.' (2) The daughters of dukes, marquises, and earls have Lady (more formally, e.g. on a superscription, The Lady) prefixed to their Christian names. (3) The wife of the holder of a courtesy title in which Lord is prefixed to a Christian name is known as 'The Lady John B.' (4) The wife of a baronet or other knight ('Sir John C.') is commonly spoken of as 'Lady C.', the strictly correct appellation 'Dame Mary C.' being confined to legal documents, sepulchral monuments, and the like.

Lævo, levo- (lævo), used as combining form of L. lævus, in the sense 'turning or turned' to the left', in physical and chemical terms, chiefly having reference to the property possessed by certain substances of causing the plane of a ray of polarized light to rotate to the left (cf. DEXTRO-). Lag (læg), sb. <sup>1</sup> and a. [Belongs to LAG v. <sup>2</sup>; the origin and mutual relation of the words are obscure.

In some parts of England lag, seg, lag, or foggie, seggie, laggie, are used in children's games as substitutes for 'first, second, last' (see Eng. Dial. Dict. s.v. Fog). This suggests the possibility that lag may have originated in the language of sports as an arbitrary distortion of last; but even in that case the word may have coalesced with a homophone of independent origin. The current hypothesis that the adj. is a Welsh lag (earlier laci), lr. and Gael. lag, slack, weak, is highly improbable. There is some affinity of sense between lag and LACK a. and v. (cf. to come lag and to come lack); the former might conceivably be an alteration of the latter under the influence of words like FLAG v., LAG sb. Cf. further MDa. lakke to go slowly (Kalkar).]

Laik, Sc. form of LACK; variant of LAKE.

-laik, suffix, in the Ormulum written -le33c in northern and north-midland texts usually -laik, -layk(e), in the Ancrer Riwle (MS. Nero) and a few other 13th c. texts -leic, -lec, -loik; appended in ME. to adjs. to form sb. of quality, none of which have survived into mod. Eng. Etymologically it represents the ON. -leik-r str. masc. which (with a parallel form -leike wk. masc.) is the ordinary suffix in ON. corresponding functionally to the Eng. -ness; its use in Eng. must have originated in words adopted from Scandinavian, as galle33c (Orm.) from ON. gǫlleikr; but already in the Ormulum (c. 1200) it is added freely to native English adjs., as in chene33c cleanliness, grede33c greediness. Ormin has in all 28 words of this formation; in some instances he originally wrote -ness, but -33c has been substituted 'in a ruder but apparently contemporary hand' (editorial note in Orm. II. 349); the reason was perh. metrical, as -33c and -ness were in Ormin's prosody equivalent only before a vowel. Except in the Ormulum the suffix is somewhat rare, and no instance is known of its being appended to an adj. of Romanic origin.

The ON. -leik-r corresponds in form with the OE. suffix -lic (usually neut., rarely masc.), now -lock (q. v. for the etymology); but in function the two are distinct, the ON. suffix being appended only to adjs., and the OE. suffix only to sb. or verb-stems to form sb. expressive of action. Occasionally the suffix representing OE. -lic was in northern or north midland texts written -laik, so that it became coincident in form with the Scandinavian suffix, e.g. in dreimerlaik (Alex.), wedlaik (R. Brunne).

The origin is obscure. The primary sense may be 'inside of the mouth'; this is not proved by the existence of the phrase humeret le lampas 'to whet one's whistle'; but cf. lampassé (Her.) 'langued' (see LAMPASSING); some Fr. dialect glossaries, also, have the word with the sense 'ulula', Florio has It. lampasco as the name of the disease, and Littré cites a Fr. dial. form enpas, which is due to mistake of the initial l for the article.

The med. L. lampreda is usually believed to be an alteration of the synonymous lampetra (recorded earlier, viz. in the Glossary of Philoxenus, 14-5th c.), which is explained as f. L. lāmbre to lick & petra stone, in allusion to the fact that the lamprey attaches itself by a sucker to stones. The use of med. L. lampreda for the LIMPET as well as the lamprey gives some plausibility to this; but possibly lampetra may be merely an etymologizing perversion.]

Metal* II, 29 The blade being properly ground, is then glazed, by applying it to the lap. 1884 F. J. The normal representative of the OE. word is the obsolete lape; the form lappe, lap may be due to the influence of F. laper (an adoption of the Teut. word).]

The second component is OK. lōrd, ON. borde, ship's side (BOARD sb. 12); the origin of the first component, which appears as ladde-, lade-, lathe-, late-, has not been determined.

Some would connect it with LAD v., taking it to mean 'the side on which cargo was received', or on which deck cargo was placed.

In OE. the corresponding term was larbord; this did not survive into ME. though its etymological equivalent still remains in all the mod. continental Teut. tongues, and was adopted into Rom. (f. bâbord). The word seems to have meant 'the side at the lar of the steersman'; the rudder or steering-paddle of early Germanic ships having been worked over the right side, whence the name starbord 'steering-side', STARBOARD.]

8. In mod. Eng., a general designation for considerable magnitude, used instead of great when it is not intended to convey the emotional implication now belonging to that word. (See GREAT a. 6.) The more colloquial or less refined synonym is big.

a. Of material objects. Also in phrases like large of limb = 'having large limbs'.

Not ordinarily said of persons; the occasional use of expressions like 'a large man' is somewhat playful, the notion being 'taking up a great deal of room'. To say 'the larger (= 'bigger') children' is admissible, if perh. somewhat unusual, but the positive (and, indeed, the comparative in the singular) could not be similarly used.

In the earlier examples there may be some notion of the sense 'ample'.

Possibly it may represent the northern LARK v., as heard by sporting men from Yorkshire jockeys or grooms; the sound (læk, lāek), which is written lark in Robinson's Whitty Glossary and in dialect books, would to a southern hearer more naturally suggest 'lark' than 'lake' as its equivalent in educated pronunciation. On the other hand, it is quite as likely that the word may have originated in some allusion to LARK sb. 1; cf. the similar use of skylark vb. (which, however, is app. not recorded till much later.)

Larrikin (lär'ikin). Chiefly Austral. Also larikin. [Of uncertain origin; possibly f. Larry (a nickname for Lawrence, common in Ireland) + -KIN.]

The word seems to have originated in Melbourne not long before 1870; but the current story that it was evolved by a reporter from an Irish policeman's pronunciation of larking, heard in a Melbourne police-court in 1869, appears to be a figment, no trace of the incident being found in the local papers of the time. (See Morris, Austral Eng., s.v.) A guess that has been proposed is that it is short for Eng. slang leary kitchen.

2. A commercial denomination of weight, capacity, or quantity, varying for different kinds of goods and in different localities. Cf. G. last.

Originally the 'last' must have been the quantity carried at one time by the vehicle (boat, wagon, etc.) ordinarily used for the particular kind of merchandise. As a weight, it is often stated to be like the Ger. weight of the same name) nominally equivalent either to 2 tons or to 4,000 lbs. In wool weight it is 4368 lbs. (= 12 sacks). A last of gunpowder is said to be 2,400 lbs. (= 24 barrels), and of feathers or flax 1,700 lbs.

The equivalence of the last of wool with 12 sacks seems to have led to an association of the word with the number twelve. Thus a last of hides was formerly 12 dozen (also 20 dickers of 10 hides each); of beer 12 barrels; of pitch 12 (sometimes 14) barrels; of cod and herrings 12 barrels (but of red herrings and pilchards 10,000 to 13,200 fish).

As a measure for grain and malt, the last was in the 16th c. 12 quarters, but is now 10 quarters = 80 bushels.

[In their original geographical use latitude (L. latitudo, Gr. πλάτος) and longitude (L. longitudo, Gr. μήκος) meant quite literally the 'breadth' and 'length' of the oblong map of the known world; this literal sense remained even in the expression 'degrees of latitude and longitude' (μοῖραι πλάτους καὶ μήκος). By a natural development the terms afterwards came (in late Latin, app. not yet in Greek) to denote the distance of any place, in the breadthwise and lengthwise direction respectively, from the circle assumed as the origin of measurement.]

5. Astron. The angular distance of a heavenly body from the ecliptic: called spec. celestial latitude. (See also ASCENDING vbl. sb., GEOCENTRIC a. 1, HELIOCENTRIC a. 1, HELIOGRAPHIC a. 1.)

The history of this sense appears to be as follows. Orig. the word was applied, on the analogy of the geographical use (see 4) to denote the angular distance of a point in the celestial sphere from the equator, measured along a secondary to the latter. This, however, was not accurately distinguished by name from the distance of a point from the ecliptic, the terms 'latitude' and 'declination' being employed indiscriminately with reference to both these ways of indicating position. (Cf. quot. 1391.) In mod. use, the terms have been differentiated, declination being appropriated to what was originally and with historical propriety called 'latitude', while latitude became the name for distance from the ecliptic.

Possibly the alliteration of the last-quoted phrase may sufficiently account for the use of the name; some, however, have suggested an allusion to the heat prevalent about St. Laurence's day (Aug. 10). Another conjecture is that there was a joke to the effect that when the martyr St. Laurence told his tormentors to turn him round on his gridiron, it was because he was too lazy to turn himself. It is important to note that the equivalent G. der faule Lenz (Lenz = Lorenz) has been in use from the 16th c.; see GRIMM s.v. Lenz.

1796 FROGE Anonymous (1809) 348 Laurence bids wages: a proverbial saying for to be lazy; because St. Laurence's day is the 10th of August, within the dog-days, and when the weather is usually very hot and faint. 1821 CLARE *Vill. Lave (ləv), v.<sup>1</sup> Now chiefly poet. Forms: 1 lafan, lafellan, 2-3 lavin, 7 Sc. lave, 4- lave.

[Two distinct formations appear to have coalesced—

(1) OE. had lafian to wash by affusion, to pour (water), corresponding formally to MDu., Du. laven, OHG. labōn (MHG., mod.G. laben) to refresh; cf. OHG. laba, mod.G. labe refreshment. By some scholars the OE., Du., and Ger. words are considered to represent a WGer. adoption of L. lavare to wash. This view involves some difficulty, as the numerous OHG. examples refer to refreshment by food, drink, or warmth, so that the assumed primary sense 'to wash', if it ever existed, must have been quite forgotten. The L. origin, however, accounts well for the senses of the OE. word, which perh. may be only accidentally similar in form to the continental words. (2) In ME. the representative of the OE. vb. blended indistinguishably with the vb. a. F. laver (= Pr., Sp., Pg. lavar, It. lavare): = L. lavare = Gr. λούειν, f. OArayan root *lou- to wash (whence LATHER).]

III. Scientific and philosophical uses.

17. In the sciences of observation, a theoretical principle deduced from particular facts, applicable to a defined group or class of phenomena, and expressible by the statement that a particular phenomenon always occurs if certain conditions be present. In the physical sciences, and occasionally in others, called more explicitly law of nature or natural law.

The 'laws of nature', by those who first used the term in this sense, were viewed as commands imposed by the Deity upon matter, and even writers who do not accept this view often speak of them as 'obeyed' by the phenomena, or as agents by which the phenomena are produced.

1665 Phil. Trans. I. 11 The changes be varied according to very odd Laws. 1665 Hovell Ocean. Reff. IV. vi. II* (ed 2) 5 The Laws of Nature are simply statements of the orderly condition of things in Nature. 1888 G. Merfirth Odes Fr. Hist. 62 Those firm laws Which we name Gods.

b. With reference to a particular science or field of inquiry.

Laws of motion: chiefly used specc. for the three following propositions formulated by Newton: (1) A body must continue in its state of rest or of uniform motion in a straight line, unless acted on by some external force; (2) Change of motion takes place in the direction of the impressed force, and is proportional to it; (3) Action and reaction are equal, and in contrary directions.

1668 Phil. Trans. III. 864 A Summary Account given by Dr. John Wallis, Of the General Laws of Motion.. communicated to the R. Society, November 26. 1668. 1666 Ibid. IV. 925 A Summary Account Of the Laws of Motion, communicated by Mr. Christian Hugen in a Letter to the R. Society. 1726 tr. R. Conder Bas. Faith III. 122 The laws of reasoning. 1884 tr. Lotze's Metaph. 333 Stated in its complete logical form a law is always a universal hypothetical judgment, which states that whenever C is or holds good, B is or holds good.

c. In certain sciences, particular 'laws' are known by the names of their discoverers, as in the following examples. (Most of these terms are of general European currency, their equivalents being used in Fr., Ger., It., etc.)

Bode's law, an empirical formula representing the distances of the orbits of the other planets from the orbit of Mercury as forming an approximate geometrical progression. Kepler's laws, the three propositions established by John Kepler (1571-1630) with regard to the planetary motions: (1) That the planets move in ellipses, the sun being in one of the foci; (2) That the radius vector of a planet describes equal areas in equal times; (3) That the square of the periodic time of a planet is directly proportional to the cube of its mean distance from the sun.

1781 Chambers's Cycl., Kepler's Law, is that law of the planetary motions discovered by Kepler. 1805 Edin. Rev. Jan. 443 Kepler's Laws. 1833 Herschel Astron. Index, Bode's law of planetary distances. 1837 Whewell Induct. Sect. 1, 456 One of the important rules known to us as 'Kepler's laws'.

(b) Physics.

Avogadro's law, the law that equal volumes of different gases, pressure and temperature being equal, contain the same number of molecules. Boyle's law, the principle, published by Robert Boyle about 1662, that the volume of a given mass of gas (the temperature being constant) varies inversely as the pressure. Charles's law, the law discovered by Alex. César Charles (1746-1823) that for every degree centigrade of rise in temperature, the volume of a gas increases by  $\frac{1}{273}$  of its amount at zero. Dulong and Petit's law, the law that all the chemical elements have approximately the same atomic heat.

1866 Maxwell Sci. Papers (1890) I, 389 Boyle and Mariotte's law. 1862 Atkinson's Galois's Physics 110 The laws of the compressibility of gases were studied separately by Boyle and by Mariotte. Each of these philosophers arrived at the same law, which in England bears the name of Boyle's, and on the continent of Mariotte's. Ibid. 288 Dulong and Petit's law may be thus expressed: 'the same quantity of heat is needed to heat an atom of all simple bodies to the same extent.' 1880 Clemensius tr. Weyl's Atomic Theory v. 95 The 'law', as it is generally called, of Avogadro and Ampère may be enunciated as follows: 'Equal volumes of gases or vapours contain the same number of molecules.' 1884 Daniell Princ. Physics 22 Then the volume varies as the 'absolute temperature' (Charles's Law, often attributed to Gay Lussac).

(c) Philology.

Grimm's law, the rule formulated by Jacob Grimm (in the 2d ed. of his Deutsche Grammatik, 1822) with regard to the representation in the Germanic langs. of certain consonants of the primitive Aryan language. Grimm's statement was that original aspirates became media in Gothic, Low German, English, Old Norse, etc. and tenues in High German; original media became tenues in Gothic, etc., and 'aspirates' supposed to be represented by spirants and affricates in High German; and original tenues became 'aspirates' in Gothic, etc. and media in High German. The formula is no longer accepted as correct, but the name of 'Grimm's law' is still applied to its rectified form, which is too complicated to be stated here. Verner's law, discovered by Karl Verner of Copenhagen in 1875, deals with a class of exceptions to Grimm's law, and is to the effect that an original Germanic voiceless spirant, when following or terminating a primitively unaccented syllable, became a voiced spirant, which in the historic Germanic langs. is under certain conditions represented by a media; the z which according to the 'law' results from s, except in Gothic, normally represented by r. Grassmann's law, published by Hermann Grassmann in 1863, is that when primitive Aryan had two aspirates in the same or successive syllables the former of them was in Sanskrit changed into the corresponding tenuis, and in Greek into the corresponding tenuis.

1841 Latham Eng. Lang. 190 An important fact relating to the change of consonants, which is currently called Grimm's Law. 1878 Sweet in Academy 9 Feb. 123½ Verner's law [explained].

(d) Pol. Econ.

Gresham's law, the principle, involved in Sir Thomas Gresham's letter to Q. Elizabeth in 1558, that 'bad money drives out good', i.e. that when debased money (sc. coins reduced in weight or fineness, or both) is current in the same country with coins of full legal weight and fineness, the latter will tend to be exported, leaving the inferior money as the only circulating medium.

1858 MacLeod Elem. Pol. Econ. 177 As he was the first to perceive that a bad and debased currency is the cause of the disappearance of the good money, we are only doing what is just, in calling this great fundamental law of the currency by his name. We may call it Gresham's law of the currency.

18. In generalized sense: Laws (of Nature) in general; the order and regularity in Nature of which laws are the expression.
